The following information is presented to ensure your awareness of what those potential risks might be.

-Ocean travel, outdoor activities and the consumption of raw shellfish have certain inherent risks which include:

- unpredictable and variable ocean & weather conditions (e.g. wind, waves, collision with exposed or unexposed hazards including vessels)
- natural hazards (e.g. rock falls, tree falls, lightening strikes, earthquakes, animal attacks, contact with poisonous plants/marine life and ticks, slippery rocks/ramps/decks)
- group travel hazards (e.g. actions of another participant affecting safety, return home or travel plans of entire group)
- consuming raw shellfish when the ocean temperatures are above 15 Deg. C. may result in illness due to the naturally occurring presence of the bacteria Vibrio parahaemolyticus (Vp) Persons with compromised immune systems should not eat raw shellfish during the summer months when water temperatures are above 15 Deg. Centigrade.

-Thors Cove, Lancelot Inlet is in a semi-remote, water access location, 7 km from the Okeover Inlet Wharf and paved roads. The Powell River Hospital is 30 minutes away from Okeover Inlet Wharf. The Comox Coast Guard helicopter is approximately 1/2 hour to 1 hour from Thors Cove, Lancelot Inlet, Should medical attention be required, remoteness and the resulting lack of instant communication, may contribute to a delay of medical treatment. You will be expected to pay for any expenses incurred as a result of emergency evacuation or medical care.

-Failure to follow the instructions of the skippers Susan Canning or Roger Thorn of the Water Taxi "Francis" may result in injury.

-The shellfish grown by Thynne Island Seafoods Ltd. and offered at Thors Cove Cottage is tested weekly by the Canadian Food Inspection Agency. Raw shellfish should not be consumed during the summer months when ocean temperatures are above 15 Degrees Centigrade. All shellfish prepared by Susan Canning are cooked at temperatures above 45 D.
